Mary Pickford Appears
In "Daddy Long Legs"Great Screen Favorite To Be Seen in Stage Success
At Majestic No. 2.

Humor, with tears that tread upon smiles, is the keynote of "Daddy Long Legs," screen version of the famous story by Jean Webster, in which Mary Pickford will be seen at Majestic No. 2, for the first time beginning Sunday. The picture is the production of her own company, Miss Pickford, as "Judy Abbott," easily has the best role of her career. As a poor orphan child, ever helping those about her and making the most of cruel treatment, she finally rises to wonderful heights.

The picture was directed by Marshall Neilan, one of the wonders of the screen world. Neilan is foremost in the new generation of producers and a very young man, but already he has won the name of "The Mark Twain of the Screen," so human and humorous are his touches. The early part of "Daddy Long Legs" is especially full of laugh-winning situations of many sorts. How the pathetic little ones "carry on" when the avuncular Mr. Abbott is trying to make them "show off" for the trustees of the institution; how they go on strike against the orphanage; how Judy Abbott (the sunshiny little orphan played by Miss Pickford) aided by a freckled-face little boy, plays upon the matron's daughter, are only a few of the humorous episodes in which the picture abounds.

As well as being a picture which will tug at the heartstrings of every parent, "Daddy Long Legs" will make the children of the city and elders laugh, for there are dozens of sweet and funny little children in it, who play the parts of orphans in the great home where the early part of the action is laid.

Dustin Farnum
In Big Role
At New MajesticTheda Bara To Be Seen in South Sea Story.

Coming with a widely heralded reputation as affording Dustin Farnum the most popularly accepted vehicle of his screen career, "A Man of the Sea" will be presented at New Majestic No. 1 Sunday, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday.

Few modern romances have attained a larger popularity than Roger Pocock's novel on which the latest Farnum superpicture is based, and which it closely follows in story. The rapid action so essential to a great motion picture is easily forthcoming from the swiftly moving story of the novel, and in the photoplay version is added the natural advantage of swift succession of event and change of scene possessed by the screen over the written word.

The story centers around the nature of the gentlemen who is first a shipwrecked sailor, then a companion of cowboys and last a ranger, and portrays his adventures in the great Northwest. A fascinating love story is said to weave itself into the main thread of the story, which is reported to hold a surprise for the audience right up to the final scene.

Assuming the role of a Black Prince of the South Sea Islands, Theda Bara, in the William Fox superproduction, "A Woman There Was," will be seen at New Majestic No. 1 next Thursday, Friday and Saturday.

The story is a gripping one, woven around the possession of the sacred black tribal pearl and the appearance of an American missionary with whom the princess falls desperately in love. The tropical passion displayed by Miss Bara is typical of her emotional roles heretofore seen on the screen in Fox productions, yet the role is unusual because of the absence of any vanity traits. It was plainly evident that Miss Bara's interpretation of her part was greatly appreciated by the audience. Sensational action is seen throughout the piece—including a tropical typhoon which wipes a village off the map. From the raging sea the white missionary rescues the heroine; after which she receives a death wound from her jealous native followers and dies in the arms of the man she loves.

TURK CAPITAL IS BIG PROBLEM FOR ALLIES TO SOLVE

The United States as mandatory, separating it from Turkish territory in Asia and bestowing upon it most of the remaining territory of Turkey in Europe.

Would Oust Sultan.

This would have meant to eliminate the sultan. It would have meant putting the sick man out of Europe at last, after 600 years of incompetence and worse. But the sultan of Turkey is not merely head of the Turkish empire, but the recognized spiritual head of the larger part of Islam, and very promptly there came from British India and from other parts of the Mohammedan world emphatic protests. These protests would have had little weight had there been any clear-cut policy as to Constantinople, but there was not. The European nations were willing that the United States should undertake the task of repeating in Constantinople what was achieved in Havana, but all Europe has agreed against the transfer of this city to any single European power, while there is not much enthusiasm at the moment on the part of the United States representatives.

It was then proposed, and is now under discussion, that Constantinople, Anatolia, which is the larger part of Asia Minor, and Armenia, should be constituted mandatories under the league of nations. Armenia, certainly, is to be assigned to the United States, Anatolia either to the United States or France, and Constantinople with Anatolia to the United States, if our country agrees to take Anatolia. Over Anatolia and Constantinople, the sultan would have shadow authority, such as is maintained by the khedive of Egypt, or the bey in Tunis.

This solution of the problem of Asia Minor was, however, complicated by innumerable claims and by not a few secret treaties. By the treaties in which Great Britain and France agreed to support Italian claims to Trieste, Dalmatia, they recognized Italian claims to Dodecanese and the islands of the Eastern Aegean taken in war, and to practically all the Southern coast of Asia Minor, including the great gulf of Adalia. Some encouragement was also given to the Italian claims upon Smyrna.

But the allies have already assigned Smyrna to Greece, and are now asking Italy to abandon her claims to Dodecanese in view of the fact that the population in that area is Greek. It results, therefore, that Italy has demanded and will doubtless receive further concessions in the hinterland of the Gulf of Adalia. Thus the whole of the western coast of Asia Minor, with the great gulf of Smyrna and the south coast, and the shores of the straits, Anatolia would be deprived of all its outlets to the sea and some seven of its eight million Turks would be penned up in Asia Minor.

Anatolia Difficult.

As to Anatolia, previous agreements have made this question difficult also. Under one Franco-British arrangement, the French were to have the Gulf of Adalia, the Aegean coast, and the straits between the Taurus mountains and Armenia about Adana. This would divide the Armenians of the Gulf of Adalia, the Mediterranean, and under Armenian impulse France has been persuaded to abandon this claim. True, Armenia, a solid block of hinterland about the headquarters of the Euphrates and the Tigris, has all along been indicated as the site of the Armenian state, but in a very large part of this area, as a result of massacres, Armenians are in a minority. On the other hand, the collapse of Russia has made possible a union with Turkish Armenia of Russian Armenia districts which are in far better condition both as to population and economic circumstances.

But it must be recognized that if there is great opportunity in Armenia, there is a stupendous task, increased by the rivalries of the surrounding races. If Russia ever regains her full strength, as is likely, she is bound not alone to demand the retrocession of her own Armenian districts, but also of those other Armenian districts, and for that matter of Constantinople, promised her in her 1915 agreement with France and Great Britain. French interests in Syria, British concerns on the Euphrates, will be equally affected by the erection of a relatively strong Armenian state in what both will regard as the hinterland of her Syrian and Mesopotamian countries, while the Turk may be expected to nourish the hope of reclaiming his Armenian provinces. Nor will the task be lighter in view of the age-long feud between the Mohammedan Kurds, actually a majority now in Armenia. If the United States should take Armenia alone, it will have to build many railroads over a difficult country and many highways. It will have to create harbors, it will have to maintain a considerable army over an extended period of time in a country where racial feuds have led to massacre time and again. It will take at least half a century to put things on its feet, but on the other hand, there is no mandatory within the gift of the league of nations which would offer a greater chance for unselfish human service. The Armenians themselves are industrious, their country has great mineral resources, great possibilities of ultimate prosperity.

Task Gigantic.

If an American mandatory is to be stretched to cover Constantinople, Anatolia and Armenia, the task will be far more gigantic and far more difficult. Constantinople has been the cause of more wars than almost any other city in the world. It is hard to believe that in the future it will be less coveted. Greek and Bulgarian ambitions will continue. The day is almost certain to come when Russia will once more look southward toward Anatolia. We shall find ourselves faced with seven million Turks, who will hardly welcome our rule, and we shall find ourselves confronted with the task of defending them against Greeks and Italians. The mandatory for Constantinople, Anatolia and Armenia would mean the employment of an army of a quarter of a million Americans for an extended period of time. It would mean an enormous task of organization, industrially as well as politically, and it would mean inevitable participation in all disputes of the future in the near East. It would mean, in reality, that Europe had transferred to the United States the gigantic task of solving the Eastern problem, which is and remains beyond European possibilities. But we should find ourselves handicapped in such a solution by the fact that the essential parts of the territory affected have already been assigned to Italy and Greece, including the natural harbors. Armenia would be a much less ambitious task, but one the difficulties of which could not be exaggerated. It would mean a task involving thousands of American soldiers and consular forces. I have said, and I repeat, that the United States has a task which is conceivable, and if any mandatory is to be taken by the United States, it must be in the form of a mandate, which the Philippines was child's play and Cuba a mere pastime.

By contrast, dividing the territory which is economically the most important in the world, the United States, opens the way to vast difficulties in the future, and in these difficulties it will be involved if we accept any mandatory in this region.

ARMENIANS FAVOR IT.

I do not think there is any question that the Armenian population would welcome an American mandatory. I do not think there is any doubt that because of our lack of self-interest in that region, we should be the best mandatory. On the other hand, to take Constantinople, Anatolia and Armenia would be a task which is conceivable, and if any mandatory is to be taken by the United States, it must be in the form of a mandate, which the Philippines was child's play and Cuba a mere pastime.
